The plaintiff occupied the house ostensibly as tenant to the defendant for a nominal rent In 1880 the defendant brought a suit against the plaintiff to recover possession of the house and obtained an ex parte decree He applied for execution of the decree but allowed the execution proceedings to drop In 1883 he made a fresh application for execution Thereupon the plaintiff filed the present suit for a declaration of his title to the house in question and of his right to retain possession alleging that the defendant was a mere benamidar that the sale deed and the ex parte decree were sham and collusive transactions in fraud of the plaintiff's creditor and that the defendant was merely a trustee for him Held that the plaintiff was bound by the decree passed in 1880 in the defendant's favour though it was a collusive decree The plaintiff could not get the judgment set aside which the defendant had obtained against him by his own contrivance The plaintiff alleged that the defendant held in trust for him the object of that trust being to protect the plaintiff's property in fraud of his creditors Even if such a trust enforceable by the Court could arise out of such a turpis causa the question was whether this continued to subsist and would be enforced when the original relations of the parties had become merged in the decree obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff. in default to deliver up to him possession of the land. The money was not paid and F as purchaser from G got possession in execution of the above decree in August 1873. In September 1885 the plaintiff as B's heir and legal representative filed a suit against G and F to redeem the property. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiff's claim was res judicata by virtue of the decree passed in 1872 and that the right to redeem was lost. On appeal, the Court reversed this decision and passed a decree for redemption on payment of R100 by the plaintiff within six months. The defendant F then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction. Held that the plaintiff's claim was res judicata. In the suit brought by G (the mortgagee) in 1871 he had claimed the land as owner through the forfeiture clause in the mortgage-deed and the mortgagors insisting in that suit on a right still to redeem the decree plainly meant to give them by way of indulgence one month within which to regain the land by payment of R100 to G. It renewed the mortgage but with a condition which was a material part of the decree. They having failed to pay the mortgage was extinguished. After the lapse of the month G could not have recovered the R100. Had he sought to recover that money he would have been met by the terms of the decree. He was entitled to the land and nothing else. So too was F as his vendee. As then there was no debt that could be recovered there was and could be no subsisting mortgage that could be redeemed. VISHNU CHINTAMAN v BALAJI BIN RAGHUJI I. L. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that the question as to the rate at which the rent was payable was res judicata it not being alleged that there had been any agreement subsequent to the first suit by which the rate was altered Held that the question as to the rent payable for the period covered by the first suit was res judicata but that it did not follow that the decree in that suit operated as res judicata and conclusively determined the rate of the rent payable for the year in respect of which the subsequent suit was brought That depended on whether the previous decision was that the plaintiff should recover from the defendant the sum admitted by him to be due or that the sum so admitted to be due was the proper amount of rent payable for the period in question. Held that in this case the previous decision was to the latter effect and that the question of the rate at which the rent was payable by the defendant was res judicata Punnoo Singh v Nirghun Singh I L R 7 Calc 298 and Jeo Lal Singh v Surfun 11 C L R 483 referred to HURRY BEHARI BHAGAT v PARGUN AHIR

32 ———— Dismissal of suit on default of plaintiff to give security for costs—Defendant precluded from pleading matter which is res judicata—Civil Procedure Code 1877 ss 13 381 The plaintiff sued the defendants on a promissory note. The defendants filed a written statement alleging that the note had been obtained by the plaintiff by fraud and false representation. Previously to the filing of the present suit by the plaintiff the defendants had brought a suit against the plaintiff in which they prayed that the said promissory note might be delivered up to be cancelled. Their plaint in that suit contained allegations of fraud and want of consideration identical with those contained in their written statement in the present suit. The plaintiffs in the former suit (the present defendants) having failed to give security for costs the suit was dismissed under s. 381 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877). It was now contended that the defendants were estopped from pleading as a defence to the present suit the fraud and want of consideration which had been alleged by them as plaintiffs in the former suit which had been dismissed. Held that the defence might be pleaded and that the question of fraud and want of consideration was not res judicata within the meaning of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. The previous suit had been dismissed by reason of the plaintiffs (the present defendants) failure to give security for costs and a Court cannot be said to "hear and decide" a matter which it is relieved from hearing and deciding by the plaintiff s default. In pursuance of that decree which was made in 1865 the land had been according to the evidence taken by the defendants in whose possession it was in 1868 from which date till 1883 when the present suit was brought that land had been treated, also by the Government authorities and by the defendants as belonging to the latter Had the question been one of limitation the possession of the defendants for a period of twelve years would not have been sufficient to exclude this claim by the plaintiff the Government to recover whatever could have been shown to be its property The question however was not one of limitation and the fact of the possession having been retained for so long a period was used by the defendants not to make a title but to define or identify the land which the decree of 1865 had awarded to them. Although the specification of the boundaries (which had been mentioned merely by reference to the plaint which mentioned adjoining villages) had been ineffectual the acts of the parties had been such as to fix the meaning of the terms used and it was established by the evidence that the land now claimed was identical with that which had been made over under the decree of 1865 to which it related. ... of the Khoti Settlement Act (Bom Act I of 1880) The mere fact that in the former suit thal or the produce of betel nut may have been wrongly awarded

... in the previous suit. The plaintiff in his plaint in that suit did not allege what was the rate according to practice or that according to practice the defendants were liable to pay thal in respect of betel nuts He merely specified betel nuts as one of the items in respect of which thal was payable to him for the year 1897 98 and the rate at which it was payable that year The question of defendants liability in respect of betel nuts not only for the year 1897 98 but for all years according to practice was not alleged and was therefore not directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit. All that the former suit decided was that thal was payable in respect of betel nuts for the year 1897 98 as alleged and claimed in the plaint and not according to practice Held also on the merits that having regard to the Collector s botkhat (statement) the plaintiff was not entitled to recover rent in respect of betel nuts The rule of English law that where the allegation on the record is uncertain there is no res judicata is also the rule embodied in Expl I to s 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) VISHNU VASUDEV JUVEKAR v RAMLING BHIKLING GURAV (1901)

Court held that A s right to maintain the suit was not barred by res judicata Explanation II to s 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) must be read in conjunction with and as part and parcel of the leading provisions of the section itself According to those provisions several conditions are necessary to constitute a matter res judicata Two of those conditions are (i) that the matter must have been in the former suit directly and substantially in issue and (ii) that it must have been heard and finally decided in that suit The explanation does no more than lay down that if a matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence in the former suit is not made such a ground it shall be dealt with as falling within the first of the abovementioned conditions. That is the omission shall have the same effect given to it as it would have had if it had been made a ground of defence But to constitute res judicata a second condition is necessary—it must have been finally decided and if the former suit went off on a preliminary ground not calling for adjudication on other grounds of defences whether raised or not those grounds remain undecided. The same effect must be given to a matter which might and ought to have been but has not been made a ground of defence in the former suit as must be given to it if it had been made a ground of defence in the former suit ABDULLAKHAN v KHANMIA (1908) I L R 32 Bom 315

18 — — — — Sale in execution of decree—Mitakshara law—Alienation, voluntary and involuntary, by the members of a family governed by the Mitakshara law. A, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, after the attachment of a property part of his ancestral estate to which he and his minor son B were jointly entitled as members of a joint Hindu family, conveyed by a deed of gift the whole of his interest in the ancestral property including the property under attachment to B. Five days after the execution of the deed of gift the property was sold in execution of the decree of the attaching creditor C and was purchased by C at such sale. Ten days after the sale A instituted proceedings under s. 2[illegible] of Act VIII of 1859 to set aside the sale on the ground of irregularity. These proceedings were afterwards continued in the name of A but virtually on behalf of the minor B under the control and direction of the Collector who had taken charge of his estate and appointed a manager under Act XL of 1858. These proceedings terminated in 1874 by the application to set aside the sale being dismissed, and the sale was therefore confirmed, and C took possession of the property. In 1[illegible] a suit was instituted on behalf of D by the manager appointed by the Collector against C and A to recover possession of the property on the grounds—(i) that when it was sold it was no the property of A the judgment-debtor and (ii) that the property of a joint Hindu family could not be sold or alienated by or taken in execution of a decree against a single member of that family. Held that the fact that the plaintiff through his guardian, had actively intervened in the proceedings under s. 2[illegible] of Act VIII of 1859 was no bar to the institution of the present suit on his behalf. The defendants claimed to be legally entitled to the premises in question and contended that the plaintiff s suit was barred under s. 2 Act VIII of 1859 by reason that the plaintiff had already during his grandmother s lifetime brought a suit against her and the defendant s father as a co-defendant to establish his right to the same premises, which suit had been dismissed. Meaning of the words competent to try such subsequent suit In 1879 the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants to recover R119 which he alleged had been wrongfully exacted from him by the defendants as enhanced rent of certain land in his occupation. He claimed to be owner of the land subject to a quit rent payable to the defendants The defendants denied his ownership and asserted their right to levy the enhanced rent The lower Court held that the defendants were entitled to the enhanced rent and dismissed the plaintiff s claim and the decree was confirmed on appeal by the District Court. The plaintiff appealed to the High rent of the land in question He made the same allegations as in the former suit The District Judge dismissed the suit holding it to be res judicata The plaintiff appealed to the High Court Held that although the material question in both suits was the same—i.e. as to the defendant s right to enhance the plaintiff s rent —yet the decision of the District Court upon that point in the previous suit was not res judicata so as to prevent the question being again raised between the parties From the decision in the former suit there was no appeal by reason of the suit being one for an amount less than R500 Had that suit been for a larger amount the decision of the District Court would have been subject to an appeal to the High Court It could not have been intended by the Legislature that a decision should acquire a conclusive import suit and did try it yet it was not competent to try the second suit with final effect as it had tried the earlier one In s 13 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) the words competent to try such subsequent suit or issue must mean competent to try the suit or issue with conclusive effect The District Court could not in the present suit have tried with conclusive effect and disposed of the issue tried in the first suit and hence the prior decision was not res judicata BHOLABHAI v ADESANG BHOLABHAI v COLLECTOR OF KAIRA I L R 9 Bom 75

one of their tenants. The tenant contested the legality of the distraint by a proceeding in the Rent Court and the defendant intervened on the ground that he had been actually and in good faith in receipt and enjoyment of the rent of the land occupied by the tenant On the 28th of June 1881 the Rent Court decided against the defendant but owing to some irregularity the distraint was withdrawn. Plaintiffs subsequently instituted a suit in the Rent Court against the tenant for recovery of arrears of rent and the defendant again intervened and upon enquiry under s. 148 of the Rent Act (XII of 1881) plaintiffs suit for arrears of rent was dismissed. Plaintiffs then instituted this suit in the Civil Court for declaration of their right to and possession of the land in respect of which distraint proceedings had been taken and suit for recovery of arrears of rent instituted. amends he could obtain restoration to his caste Held that while the plaintiff was entitled to come into Court for the relief prayed unless in the circumstances above stated the marriage had under the Hindu law been dissolved the Court was bound when asked to employing coercive process to compel a wife to return to her husband not to disregard any reasonable objection she might raise to such process being granted either on the ground that she had been subjected before to personal injury or cruelty at the hands of her husband or that she went in fear of one or the other or that the husband was actually living in adultery with another woman or that if she resumed cohabitation or association with him he being outcasted she would herself incur the risk of being put out of caste Held therefore that in decreeing a claim of this description a Court was entitled if it saw good reason to do so while recognizing the civil rights of husband to his wife to put such conditions upon the enforcement of his rights by legal process as the circumstances of the case might fairly demand and that applying this principle to the present case the defendant might reasonably ask the Court before compelling her return to her husband to make it a condition that he should first obtain his restoration to caste Held also that under the Hindu law the fact that a husband had had adulterous intercourse with another woman which had ceased at the time of suit was not an answer to a claim by him for restitution of conjugal rights PAIGI v SHEONARAIN

A and K M were brothers and the last male de cendants of M For an alleged fraud of K M Government restricted the enjoyment of the said village to his lifetime only A predeceased K M On the death of K M Government on the 31st December 1872 placed an attachment over the village On the 13th July 1874 a judgment credi tor of A caused the lands in dispute which were mirasi lands of the Waikar family situated at Pasar ni to be sold in execution of his decree against A and they were purchased by the defendants who was put in possession on the 22nd April 1876 In the meanwhile Government having chosen to recognize the plaintiff as a representative of the Waikar family had removed the attachment and re granted the village to the plaintiff shortly before ... on the 3rd April 1876 The plaintiff being dispossessed sued the defendant contending (inter alia) that A having predeceased his brother had no interest in the lands which had been pur chased by the defendant The Court of first in stance awarded the plaintiff s claim and directed the defendant to pay the plaintiff s costs The defendant appealed to the District Judge who was of opinion that the proceedings of Government since the attachment in 1872 and restoration of the village were acts of State and he varied the decree of the lower Court by cutting down the plaintiff s costs made payable by the lower Court s decree to half On appeal by the defendant to the High Court —Held reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff s claim should be dismissed. The attachment placed by Government on the death of K M in December 1872 was limited to an exemption from assessment and the resump tion and re grant to the plaintiff did not give the plaintiff any title to the lands in question The proceedings of Government in 1873 and 1876 by which the plaintiff was recognized as the representa tive of the Waikar family were not acts of State The status of the Waikars and other persons with whom the agreements of 1820 were entered into was not that of an independent sovereign They (the Waikars) were merely powerful saranjamdars subordinate to the Raja of Satara and after the annexation of the territory of the Raja in 1849 they held their lands under the East India Com pany Secretary of State for India v Narayan Balbhant Bhosle Printed Judgments for 1883 p 244 HARI SADASHIV v AJMUDIN

In 1858 the Collector treated the defendant as oc cupant of the land in question for the purposes of assessment and again in 1860 entered his name as occupant in the Government books In January 1868 the widow of A adopted the plaintiff as his son In 1881 the plaintiff sued the defendant to recover possession of the land let to the defendant in 1857 The defendant contended that the land was not the private land of A but belonged to the State of Kagvad which was resumed on his death by the Government and that the plaintiff s claim was barred by the law of limitation. The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiff s claim holding that the land was the private property of A and that the claim was not barred The District Judge on ap peal held that the land was not the private property of the Chief but was the property of the State and that on the resumption of the State by the British Government the defendant s lease came to an end and the relation of landlord and tenant previously existing between the Chief and the de fendant ceased He also held that the plaintiff s claim was barred by limitation and reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge On appeal to ... the British Government of a saranjam or inam leaves the occupancy rights of the saranjamdar or inamdar untouched that a saranjamdar or inamdar may acquire occupancy rights during the continuance of the saranjam or inam. Held also that the fact that the revenue officers placed the defendant s name in the Government books as the occupant paying assessment did not make the defendant s possession adverse and could not prejudice the plaintiff s rights as landlord. 5 ———— Jurisdiction and superintendence of the High Court—Civil Procedure Code 1882 s 622—Practice An error of law or procedure in the Small Cause Court confers jurisdiction upon the High Court to exercise the power committed by s 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) The powers conferred by the section are however purely discretionary and the section does not give a right of appeal in all Small Cause Court cases either on law or on fact The High Court is to determine in what cases it shall exercise the powers conferred upon it. It is not the practice of the Bombay High Court to interfere under s. 25 of the Act when there are no substantial merits in the case of the applicant It interferes to remedy injustice It is slow to interfere where substantial justice has been done by the subordinate Court, although that Court may technically have erred The provisions of s 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) do not afford a safe guide for the exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction under s 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The wording of the two sections is wholly different that of s 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act being of the widest description and conferring the most ample discretion on the High Court while it has been held by the Privy Council that s 622 of the Civil Procedure Code ought to be construed in a very restricted and limited sense POONA CITY MUNICIPALITY v RAMJI RAGHUNATH I L R 21 Bom. 250 and pleaded that the suit was not properly constituted not having been brought under s 30 or 539 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1877 and that it was in contravention of Regulation II of 1827 Ch II s 21 They relied upon the fact that the caste had approved of their conduct and had allowed them to defend this suit at the expense of the caste They contended that under these circumstances the plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain the suit and that the Court would not interfere with or control the decision of the majority of the caste in matters relating to the internal management of its affairs Held that s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) did not apply If the plaintiffs had any right of action it was a complete right of action vested in each of them and not a mere joint right shared with others and incomplete unless they right and in their own name without permission of the Court or notice to other parties interested Held also (following Thanga Karuppa v Arumuga Nadan I L R 5 Mad 383), that s. 539 of Act X of 1877 did not apply The three funds administered by the defendants were different in character The mahajan fund was a purely secular fund the other two funds were religious and charitable fund Even if the case came under the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) s 539 would not apply that section being permissive or directory and not mandatory Any person interested in the proper observance of a religious endowment may sue in his own name to have the trust properly administered. The section does not prohibit a private suit and does not make the sanction of the Advocate General a condition precedent The gifts to the temple comprised in the darasa and sadaran funds were irrevocably dedicated to a public charity and therefore the approval by the caste of the conduct of the trustees was no bar to the suit They were also dedicated to the idol who was a public not a mere private household divinity The ideal personality of such an idol is well recognized and in case of misappropriation of the property he is entitled to the protection of the public authorities on the ground that it has been devoted to public religious purposes and must not be wasted even by the donors. Bania caste and not to the whole Jain community Although the donation were irrevocably dedicated to public purposes the donors had never lost the right which was attached to the caste from the beginning of managing the temple which they had founded and their management could only be interfered with as a public charitable trust on proof of maladministration. On the evidence —Held that the defendants were not liable for losses prior to 1867 It was not clearly proved that they were managers of the temple funds before that date Held also that the defendants were liable for the losses incurred subsequently to 1867 They assumed the management on the execution of the trust deed in that year and ought to have taken steps to recover the moneys which had been improperly advanced on loan or otherwise negligently invested. Not having done so they were guilty of wilful neglect and were liable to refund the moneys which had been lost The liability was however confined to the first three defendants it not being proved that the remaining defendants had ever acted as trustees The negligence of the trustees in not taking steps to recover the R2 40 000 due from the firm of V V & Co was a clear breach of trust. The evidence showed that although the whole sum could not have been recovered at any time during the trusteeship of the defendants yet that some portion of the money might have been obtained if due diligence had been used and that other creditors of the firm had actually been paid 2 annas in the rupee The first three defendants were therefore liable to refund 2 annas in the rupee of such portion of the R2 40 000 as belonged to the darasa and sadaran funds As to the mahajan fund it belonged to the caste and the caste had condoned its misapplication which it had power to do The defendants were also held liable to refund such other sums as had come into their hands and had been lost in consequence of their negligence. The Court removed the defendants from the trusteeship and ordered a scheme to be settled. THAKERSEY DEVRAJ v HURBHUM NARSEY I L R 8 Bom. 432 out Persons having a right to worship in a temple are within the scope of s 539 Under that section as originally enacted the words were having a direct interest in the trust and the word direct has been taken out by Act VII of 1888 The inference is that the Legislature intended to allow persons having the same sort of interest that is sufficient under s 14 of Act XX of 1863 to maintain a suit under s. 539 The Collector in giving his consent to the institution of a suit under s 539 has to exercise his judgment in the matter and see not only whether the persons suing are persons having an interest in the trust but also whether the trust is a public trust of the kind contemplated by the section and whether there are prima facie grounds for thinking that there has been a breach of trust But where the form of the permission showed that he had omitted to exercise his judgment in the matter of the interest of the plaintiffs in the trust such omission was held to be a mere irregularity and within the scope of s. 578 of the Civil Procedure Code SAJEDUR RAJA CHOWDHURI v GOUR MOHUN DAS BAISHNAV

Official Assignee and the creditors of the insolvency was not in fraud of the defendant and that by the dismissal of his petition the parties as to their rights and liabilities under the contract had been relegated to the position which they occupied prior to the plaintiff's insolvency Held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages from the defendant There had been no demand for delivery by the plaintiff or on his account as required by s. 93 of the Contract Act K had a ked for delivery as beneficial owner but the property had not passed to him by the assignment and although the defendant would be bound to recognize an assignee who could establish his title of full ownership in the contract he was under no obligation to recognize K when as a fact the beneficial interest in the contract still remained in the plaintiff with whom the defendant had originally contracted In England where there has been an assignment by deed the assigned property passes by force of the deed and it cannot be impeached at law by the assignor or by third parties other than creditors on the ground of its not being a real transaction but where the assignment is not by deed the true nature of it as a sham may be proved. or connected with the services of a certain mosque that their father (defendant No 3) and cousins (defendants Nos 4 and 5) who were mutwalis in charge of the said property had illegally alienated some of these lands and had also ceased to render any service to the mosque whereupon they (the plaintiffs) had been acting as mutwalis in their stead. They therefore claimed to be entitled as such to the management and enjoyment of the lands in dispute It was contended (inter alia) that the plaintiffs could not sue in the lifetime of their father (defendant No 3) he not having transferred his rights to them. Held that the plaintiffs were entitled to sue to have the alienation made by their father and cousins set aside and the wakf property restored to the service of the mosque They were not merely beneficiaries but members of the family of the mutwalis and were the persons on whom, on the death of the existing mutwali the office of mutwali would fall by descent if indeed it had not already fallen upon them as alleged in the plaint by abandonment and resignation. 1. ———— Suit after adverse order in execution—Civil Procedure Code 1877 s 283 S. 283 of Act X of 1877 enables a party against whom an order has been made in execution proceedings to bring a suit to establish his rights, whatever they may be but it says nothing as to the nature of the suit or the Court in which it is to be brought Whether the party is to sue in the Civil Court or in the Small Cause Court depends entirely upon the nature of the claim and the right which is sought to be enforced. A person whose goods are illegally sold under an execution does not lose his right to them though he may have claimed them unsuccessfully in the execution proceedings. The defendant was anxious that he and his brothers should be re-admitted to the caste and in 1864 he entered into an agreement with the plaintiff who was at that time one of the setias of the caste whereby the latter agreed to procure the admission of the plaintiff and his brothers and get them married to girls belonging to the caste In consideration of these services the defendant was to pay the plaintiff the sum of R5 000 which sum was to become due on the marriage of the defendant's youngest brother to a girl of the caste and to be expended in purchasing caste utensils, which were to be kept for the use of the caste. The plaintiff alleged that part of this money had been already paid to him and that on the marriage of the defendant's youngest brother in 1880 he had demanded payment of the balance (viz. R3 149), which the defendant had not paid. He now sued to recover this balance One of the witnesses at the hearing was the setia of the caste who had succeeded the plaintiff in that position. appeal by the lower Appellate Court. Held that in the absence of damage over and above that which in common with the rest of the public the plaintiff has sustained his action must fail. Public nuisance is actionable only at the suit of a party who has sustained special damage and the case law of British India in this respect is the same as the rule of English law on the subject. Further that the lease to plaintiff failed to show either that the land upon which the defendant had built is included in the lease or that it intended to confer upon the plaintiff any right to question the legality of the erections existing at the time of the lease. Satku v Ibrahim Aga I L R 2 Bom 457 and Karim Bakhsh v Budha I L R 1 All 249 referred to. was a katcha road used by the village over which the public had a right of way and it had been dedicated as a road for the use and convenience of the general public. The plaintiff got a decree for the removal of the chabutra and the defendant appealed. Held that the rule of English law that a member of the public cannot maintain an action for obstruction to a public road without showing special injury to himself beyond that suffered by any member of the public does not apply to a zamindar who or whose predecessor in title had it he has a right to the soil in the road which he had never given to the public. In an action of this

A hut was accordingly built thereon. No privy was built with or attached to the hut the occupants of the hut using the oart originally buil implied the us of a privy whenever the occupants of the hut hould think fit to build one and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled to build a privy and consequently al o to a way of nece sity for a sweeper to have access to the privy when buil The occupants of the old hut had been allowed as a way of neces ity and had always used as a means of access to that portion of the site of the old hut on which the new privy was now being the new privy The plaintiff now claimed a right of way for his sweeper in a direct line from the outer gate to the new privy thus avoiding the front entrance of the house Held that having regard to the class of persons who had lived in the old hut (who were of low ca te) there could have arisen up to the pre ent time no reasonable nece sity for two ways to the site in qu stion and therefore the plaintiff was limited to the old way enjoyed by his predecessor in title Quære Whether if the lessees had been persons belonging to one of the higher castes it would not be right to take into considera tion the prejudice entertained by members of such

The cross had been for many years vi ited by Chri tian worshippers who prayed and worshipped there The plaintiff also allege l that in addition to the general use of the open space he and his predecessors in title and the occupants of his said house had for more than twenty years u ed the open pace as a footway and a way for carriages and other vehicles to approach the said house and to stand and be able to turn there He complained that the defendant had wrongfully re moved the cross and enclosed the greater portion of the said open space and he prayed for a decla ration that he and the occupants of his house were entitled to the use of the said space for purposes of recreation and as a footway and carriageway and for an injunction. The defendant pleaded that the whole of the open space formerly belonged to a Portuguese religious confraternity who were the fazendars of both his property and the plaintiff s that this confraternity had permitted the cross to be erected on the land at which the residents of the houses of the plaintiff and defendant and other ad jacent houses who were then Portuguese used to assemble and worship that the Portuguese having left the locality the cross was removed and the part of the open space which had been enclosed by the defendant had been sold to him by the confrater nity in 1837 He denied the use of the space alleged by the plaintiff. Held that the eviden e was not sufficient to establish that the land in dispute had been dedicated to the public but that on the evi dence the Court was justified in presuming and ought to presume a covenant on the part of the fazendari owners of the oart to keep the lane includ ing the upper end of it open for the use of the owners of the houses abutting upon it Such a co venant should be presumed equally in the case of a land owner giving land for building purposes to fa zendari tenants in a perpetual tenure at a fixed rent and in the case of a owner selling land out and out for building purposes.
